

Welcome to Ferrol and University of A Coruña, Spain

A Coruña and Ferrol are located in the North West corner of Spain, on the Atlantic coast. They have a very benign climate with mild temperatures being the average in summer is 21.5°C and in winter 10.8°C.

The city of A Coruña is at the same time a historic coastal city, of great importance already in the Roman times, and a modern and very cosmopolitan city of over 250.000 inhabitants. It is an industrial and service city, centre of a bigger metropolitan area. The symbol of the city is the well-known lighthouse called “Torre de Hércules” which is the only roman lighthouse still functioning nowadays. It was declared

World Heritage by UNESCO in 2009. The easiest way to get to A Coruña is by plane. By car, the Alvedro airport is just 15 minutes away from A Coruña and 30 minutes away from Ferrol, and the Santiago de Compostela airport is 50 minutes away from A Coruña and 60 minutes away from Ferrol.

The city of Ferrol has more than 80.000 inhabitants and it represents the neurological, commercial and industrial centre of one of the most densely populated areas of Galicia. The characteristics of its maritime location make it a strategic place, and that is why the campus of Ferrol stands out because of naval studies.

Travelling to Ferrol

Ferrolterra – Rías Altas is a geotourism destination composed of 21 municipalities.

To get here, there are three highways which connect the region: A-8 (from Asturias), A-6 (via Lugo) and AP-9 (south access from Vigo). When you reach the destination, an extensive network of roads connects the different locations.

The Community of Ferrol region Municipalities is the coordinating entity of the tourist agreement of Ferrolterra – Rías Altas destination. Their headquarters are located in Ferrol, the main city of this destination, in the North of A Coruña (Table 1).
